Farewell from Kathleen Brooker

IT'S BEEN MORE THAN 7 YEARS since I arrived at Historic Seattle, excited to lead a great organization which I had long admired. As the head of Historic Denver I was a colleague of past Executive Director John Chaney and current Program Director Larry Kreisman. We enjoyed brainstorming ways we could learn from each other and support our organizations. But Historic Seattle did something most non-profits did not: real estate development. When I became Historic Seattle's Executive Director in 2008 I had an opportunity to use my architectural training and combine personal and professional interests in a community famous for its beauty and quirky sensibilities. What I didn't know was how much I would enjoy working with a very talented Council; how risky but rewarding the work would be; how important the regional partnerships would become. The major new project of Washington Hall gave me a remarkable opportunity to lead a successful capital campaign and work directly with artists and community activists to restore a landmark from the inside out. At the same time it was great to reactivate our preservation easements program, and to fully lease the Good Shepherd Center and restore the grand verandah, its lovely gathering space. It was equally rewarding to return the parapet to Dearborn House and move the library into the main floor; improve management and care of our historic low-income properties; greatly enhance our financial management and operations; and survive the recession intact, streamlined and stronger for it. Along the way Historic Seattle garnered kudos in Seattle Magazine, the Seattle Times, and the National Trust for Historic Preservation's Forum Journal; celebrated 35th and 40th anniversaries of the organization; redesigned and expanded its websites and reached new audiences through social media and an acclaimed book about First Hill.

We went through challenging times, political turmoil, and the loss of traditional preservation funding sources. But I always had a not-so-secret weapon: a terrific and resilient staff. The staff of Historic Seattle is an exceptional resource. They are energized by change and will rise to this new opportunity to rethink the ways we have done things in the past. The leadership team under Kji Kelly will continue to impress you, our members and supporters, and respond to the exciting challenges that come our way every week.

I have really enjoyed the transition to Foundation Director this year, which allowed me to focus on the future of the HS Foundation and completion of our capital campaign. I will be leaving Historic Seattle at the end of April but will continue to work in the preservation field as a consultant. I look forward as always to seeing what comes next! Thank you for sharing your Seattle with me.

From Executive Director Kji Kelly

I AM BOTH HONORED AND HUMBLLED to become the fifth Executive Director in Historic Seattle's 41st year. I would like to thank Kathleen Brooker, our Council, and staff for entrusting me with this role. For me, this position is a culmination of over twenty years of work in the historic preservation field beginning in Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, with the Capitol Preservation Committee. After my work at the State Capitol, I managed restoration projects for the State of North Carolina, Historic Sites Section of the Department of Cultural Resources. Leaving the public sector, I managed rehabilitation and construction for the Facilities Management Department at Duke University. After several vacations in Seattle, my wife Becca and I decided, prior to having our first child, Jack, to move ourselves and the architectural salvage business I started while at Duke, to the Pacific Northwest. After a few years of simultaneous adventures in business and childcare, I contacted John Chaney to inquire about a position at Historic Seattle. In my ten years here, I have focused on maintaining and managing our existing property portfolio, and developing our most recently acquired property, while always looking for the next potential acquisition.

Built upon a stable foundation, Historic Seattle is now poised to take the next step in its evolution. My vision as Executive Director is as follows:

- be the most respected and successful preservation organization in the country
- build a culture of philanthropy to quickly respond to opportunities and challenges, and
- be the known authority and go-to resource on preservation issues for the region.

In the next several issues of our newsletter I will outline how, together, we can achieve these goals.

Historic Seattle is a unique organization built on passion, practicality, persuasion, and persistence. In the challenging field of historic preservation, our over forty years of existence is a testament to our success. We are diligent advocates for our city's historic and often threatened buildings. We are knowledgeable and respected educators, explaining our city's history to both engaged and active scholars and to those with a more casual interest. We are real estate professionals who maintain eight historic properties in our portfolio, and who find threatened historic structures, identify new uses, assemble the necessary funds and bring buildings back to life. To be succinct we say that we educate, advocate, and preserve. Through these three core actions we impact you and your neighbors' lives in untold ways.

Buildings with rich histories and patina - the buildings that give this city a sense of place - are not still standing because of luck. The historic buildings where you live, work, learn, play, relax and socialize continue to thrive, and add dignity to all of our lives, due in large part to Historic Seattle.

REAL ESTATE

Washington Hall Update

IN ANTICIPATION of upcoming construction activities at Washington Hall, the building was closed for public use on January 1, 2015. We continue to make substantive and timely progress on our pre-construction activities. Ron Wright and Associates has been doing a wonderful job coordinating and leading the design process. Other design team members include Rushing (mechanical and electrical engineering), Coughlin Porter Lundeen (structural engineering) and SSA Acoustics (acoustics engineering). Valuable information and input has been received from anchor organizations 206 Zulu, Hidmo and Voices Rising in addition to Washington Hall staff. Our current project budget is approximately $3,000,000. The scope of work includes but is not limited to the installation of a sprinkler system, addition of an elevator and interior stair, seismic upgrades to the entire building and the activation and restoration of public assembly and office space. Next steps include interviewing contractors, finishing the design, managing the bid process, receiving the construction permit, entering into a contract with the general contractor, closing the New Market Tax Credit deal, and beginning construction. While we continue to work on construction related activities, we also continue to explore ways to generate financial support for the project.

ADVOCACY

UW Nuclear Reactor Building

MORE THAN 25 PEOPLE (and a dog!) gathered to show their love for the Nuclear Reactor Building (aka More Hall Annex) on the University of Washington campus on February 13 to take a group photo and show off homemade valentines to the building, also known as “heart bombing.” Heart bombing is a relatively new tradition promoted by the National Trust for Historic Preservation to celebrate Valentine’s Day through public displays of affection for endangered and underappreciated places.

Thanks to everyone who made our first “heart bombing” a success. Joining Historic Seattle staff were members, volunteers, UW students, faculty, staff, and our friends from Docomomo WEWA and the Washington Trust for Historic Preservation.

The Nuclear Reactor Building is endangered because the UW is proposing to demolish the National Register of Historic Places-listed building and replace it with a new Computer Science and Engineering facility. Historic Seattle plans to engage in the UW’s environmental review process this spring and summer to advocate for a preservation alternative that preserves and adaptively reuses the historic structure, while allowing for new construction on the site.

As Knute Berger wrote in Crosscut following the heart bomb, “As old Cold War tensions are revived (see Russia and Ukraine), as the reality and legacy of nuclear power and weapons is still with us, as the relevance of remembering both the good and bad of technological innovation is greater than ever, especially on a campus that is increasingly devoted to advancing technology and engineering and the commercialization of its research, the Nuke Building has more to teach us than ever.”

ADVOCACY

Alki Homestead

THE PRESERVATION OF THE ALKI HOMESTEAD in West Seattle has been a sustained advocacy effort for Historic Seattle since 2009. Originally known as the Fir Lodge, the Homestead is one of West Seattle’s most beloved landmarks. The 1904 log building has been vacant for over six years, after a 2009 fire caused significant damage and forced the closure of the Alki Homestead Restaurant.

A coalition including Historic Seattle, Southwest Seattle Historical Society, 4Culture, and the Washington Trust for Historic Preservation has persistently advocated to save the building.

On March 13, 2015, the landmark property changed hands. Tom Lin, owner since 2005, sold the property to Mercer Island builder/investor Dennis Schilling, who plans to rehabilitate the landmark structure and construct a new six-unit apartment building on the adjacent parking lot. Mr. Schilling forged an agreement with the Southwest Seattle Historical Society, which holds an easement on the Alki Homestead parking lot and operates the Log House Museum one-half block to the south.

The Southwest Seattle Historical Society and Schilling hosted a press conference on March 14 to formally announce the news of the Homestead’s future.

EVENTS

Many Events Already Sold Out

WE WARNED PEOPLE—a number of our events have limited space and sell out quickly. In fact, early registrations resulted in sell outs for two Nucor Steel tours on March 13 and March 20; Madrona Neighborhood tour April 11; two Tsutakawa Home and Studio tours June 14; and two Chittenden Locks tours on November 15. Our Digging Deeper series has also received a good deal of interest. While the Washington State Historical Society Research Center tour is sold out June 4 and 6, there is still some space available for other events in the series at press time. But act quickly.

Please consider joining our out-of-town tours before they sell out. They are invariably wonderful, information-packed days and the all-inclusive price includes your coach transportation, lunch, expert guides, and admissions.

Upcoming programs for spring/summer/early fall are listed below. Visit our website for full descriptions and registration information.

ADVOCACY

Battelle/Talaris

OUR SPRING 2014 ISSUE OF PRESERVATION NEWS highlighted the advocacy efforts with Friends of Battelle/Talaris to successfully designate the Battelle/Talaris property in Laurelhurst as a Seattle Landmark. In 2014, stakeholders met with ownership regarding proposed plans for the property. Preservationists focused on a “win-win” solution that would allow for an economically viable project; new infill construction that respects the character of the original plan; and preservation of the buildings, site features and landscape. Advocates also supported uses and zoning that would allow for flexible development and preserve the original design integrity.

By the end of 2014, ownership communicated a willingness to consider a preservation path. In January 2015, their design team presented a proposal that adds new townhomes and single-family residences, while preserving most of the landscape and existing buildings. The Landmarks Preservation Board recently visited the site to better understand the proposal and impact on the historic site and features. Historic Seattle continues to be engaged in the effort to advocate for the thoughtful preservation of Battelle/Talaris. This sustained advocacy effort shows how collaboration between grassroots advocates and local preservation nonprofits can greatly influence what shapes a community and city that continues to experience intense development pressure.

ADVOCACY

Two Pike/Pine Auto Row buildings designated as Landmarks

THE SEATTLE LANDMARKS PRESERVATION BOARD designated two Auto Row buildings in the Pike/Pine neighborhood in January of 2015. Among Seattle’s newest Landmarks are the Kelly-Springfield building (1525 11th Avenue), constructed in 1917 and used originally for truck sales and service, and tire sales and service; and the White Motor Company building (1021 E Pine Street), an automobiles sales and office built in 1917-1918. Both buildings were designed by Seattle architect Julian Everett.

The buildings are significant to the history and development of Auto Row, and the two connected buildings were the original home of outdoor retailer REI. The buildings are also significant for their architectural style and period. Additionally, the White Motor Company building is prominently located on a key corner of the Pike/Pine neighborhood and acts as an easily identifiable visual feature of the community.

History has shown former Auto Row buildings to be good candidates for adaptive reuse, particularly for locally-owned businesses. They are more than just old brick or terra cotta facades. They are also defined by the interior volume of space and heavy timber features. They add greatly to the character of the Pike/Pine community. As the property owner and the City negotiate a controls and incentives agreement, we hope the entire building envelope (not just the primary facades) of both buildings will be preserved. The developer has plans to build a new, 75-foot high, nearly 100,000 square foot office project on the two sites. What will be preserved and incorporated into the new project is yet to be determined now that the two buildings have been landmarked.

Neighborhood advocates, along with Historic Seattle and the Washington Trust for Historic Preservation, supported the nomination and designation of both buildings. The Capitol Hill Seattle blog did an impressive job of covering the nomination/designation process and community advocacy efforts.

PURCHASE A COPY of Historic Seattle’s comprehensive cultural and architectural history, Tradition and Change on Seattle’s First Hill (Documentary Media, 2014) and cap your reading with a guided tour of First Hill to see first-hand significant survivors of a century of architecture and interior design. The book is available for $35 (including tax) or $40 with shipping by calling 206-622-6952. Tour details may be found on page 4.

TRANSITIONS

Staff Changes

SINCE OUR LAST NEWSLETTER WENT TO PRESS, there have been a number of comings, goings, and transitions at Historic Seattle. We give Kathleen Brooker our heartfelt thanks for her seven years of service as Executive Director. Kji Kelly, most recently Deputy Director, transitioned into the Executive Director role in January. Kathleen acted as Foundation Director through April of this year, continuing her work on the Campaign to Restore Washington Hall and putting our fundraising efforts on a firmer footing. (Please see page 2 for more on this transition from both Kathleen from Kji.)

In August 2014, we welcomed Suzanne de van der Schueren as our new Bookkeeper, and in February, Bailey Hess came onboard as our new Office Administrator. We were also glad to have Lee Murray, formerly Consulting Chief Financial Officer for Historic Seattle, join our staff as Director of Finance and Administration.

There were a number of other transitions, as well. With Washington Hall closing for full rehabilitation, we said farewell to Lulu Carpenter, who served as the building's Caretaker and Operations Manager. Van Diep, formerly Rental Program Manager for Washington Hall, is now our Asset and Property Manager, overseeing the operation of several of our properties. Finally, Brooke Best, who served ably as Office Manager for the past two years, is now Preservation Advocacy Coordinator, working to strengthen our outreach efforts and building partnerships with other organizations.

Communicating with You

IF YOU ARE A LONGSTANDING MEMBER of Historic Seattle, you may remember when you received quarterly newsletters with information about Historic Seattle's projects and upcoming educational programs as they were finalized—and that was it! Since 1997, we have sent out a printed guide to the entire year's program of lectures, tours, and special events. We reduced the number of newsletters to members to two per year, while we expanded our website, blog, and social media. We also have expanded our email reach through monthly e-news about upcoming events and regular reminders to participants about events they have registered for.

Since we know that some people prefer to use online resources while others like the touch and feel of a good read in print, we hope that we have found the proper balance. However, we certainly would welcome your feedback about our existing communication tools—our printed materials, our new website, our e-reminders and monthly updates. Please feel free to contact us with comments and constructive criticism. You may contact Dana Phelan at danap@historicseattle.org or 206-622-6952, ext. 225.

Council and Board Changes

WITH THE TURN OF THE YEAR, the Historic Seattle Preservation and Development Authority Council elected new leadership. We thank Marcia Wagoner for her service as Council Chair in 2013 and 2014. Long-time Council member Michael Herschensohn is now Chair. Helaine Honig was elected as Vice Chair, Kate Krafft as Secretary, and Japhet Koteen as Treasurer. We thank and wish good luck to Rico Quirindongo, who stepped down from the Council. Rico continues his work as an Architect with DLR Group and has taken on the role of Waterfront Redevelopment Chair for the Pike Place Market PDA.

The Historic Seattle Preservation Foundation Board welcomed Vernon Abelsen as a new member in February 2015. Vernon is an architect with extensive experience in the rehabilitation, preservation and adaptive reuse of historic properties. He is a former Chair of the Historic Resources Committee for AIA-Seattle and Chair of the Seattle Landmarks Preservation Board.
